

Friends of the CED,

Professor and former dean Jack Crowley will retire at the end of this semester after nearly three decades at the College of Environment and Design. He began as an assistant professor in 1978 and has since left his mark on thousands of landscape architects, planners and preservationists.

While you may not know Jack, you have likely been touched by his contributions to the CED. During his 10-year tenure as dean, Jack transitioned the School of Environmental Design to the College of Environment and Design, saw its greatest enrollment, began fundraising in earnest, experimented with incorporating the School of Ecology, and celebrated a No. 1 national ranking for the BLA program. Jack also founded a graduate program in environmental planning and design (now urban planning and design), which he directed for nine years until its first accreditation.

Jack has consistently demonstrated an incredible commitment to student success. He has given generously to UGA by establishing a professorship, a graduate fellowship and a graduate support fund—all greatly enriching the lives of our students and faculty at the CED. His contributions as both dean and professor will continue to benefit CED students and faculty for years to come.

Though Jack is retiring, I invite you to honor his impact with a gift to the CED. Your support of the CED Excellence Fund or one of his established funds will ensure his legacy lives on. Thank you in advance for considering a donation in Jack’s honor!

Sincerely,

Sonia Hirt
Dean and Hughes Professor of Landscape Architecture and Planning

P.S. – Jack is a talented artist. See the reverse of this letter for some of his work!

Friends of Jack Crowley,

Professor and former dean Jack Crowley will retire at the end of this semester after nearly three decades at the College of Environment and Design. He began as an assistant professor in 1978 and has since left his mark on thousands of landscape architects, planners and preservationists.

When asked about his post-retirement plans, Jack said, "I'll continue to work with our Master of Urban Planning and Design students, but will also spend more time traveling and working across the U.S. and in Central America, making it highly unlikely I'll be found in a rocking chair with a six-pack of beer!"

A few things you might not know about Jack:

- He served as an Arabic interpreter and field artillery officer for four years during the Vietnam War.
- After teaching landscape architecture for two years, Jack left UGA and worked as director of the Metropolitan Area Planning Commission, director of the State Department of Transportation and as a senior real estate development executive.
- In 1996, Jack returned to UGA as dean of the School of Environmental Design. During his 10-year tenure, the School became the College of Environment and Design, saw its greatest enrollment, and celebrated a No. 1 national ranking for the BLA program. Jack also founded and directed a graduate program in environmental planning and design (now urban planning and design) and was instrumental in its accreditation.
- Jack is a talented artist. See the reverse of this letter for some of his work!

I invite you to honor Jack's legacy and passion with a gift to the CED. Thank you in advance for considering a donation in Jack's honor!
